

From Jonathan Reckford, CEO of HFHI:

- We will serve as many families in Haiti as resources allow. We will do this through a variety of programs—from providing the emergency shelter kits to helping with transitional shelters to building core houses in partnership with the local government and other organizations.
- Our response will be implemented through strategically located Habitat Resource Centers. Contextualized to local needs, HRCs may focus on such services as producing construction materials (e.g., concrete blocks), offering skills training and loaning out tools or heavy equipment—all in ways that develop and support local livelihoods.
- Habitat for Humanity rebuilds communities and restores hope. Our disaster recovery efforts include family participation and holistic community development to bring back a sense of stability and cohesion in the families and the communities. Habitat is committed to staying with communities throughout the reconstruction process.
- Housing reconstruction is one of the most challenging components of any disaster recovery plan. It requires titled land, skilled labor, materials, and infrastructure – most of which are in short supply following a disaster.

Your prayerful support of those who will implement and carry out the work in Haiti is urgently needed. Please pray, too, for the Haitian families who face many more months of making do in challenging circumstances. Together, in spirit and commitment, we will make a mighty difference.

Blessings to you for all you do!

In partnership,

Jonathan T.M. Reckford
CEO, Habitat for Humanity International